With the advent of information technology, all aspects of our lives have undergone fundamental changes. Today, we face a vast amount of data generated from various sources, like social network data, IoT devices, traffic monitoring, finance, and advertisements. These application domains require fast processing and analysis of enormous volumes of continuous data in a near real-time fashion to gain valuable insights.

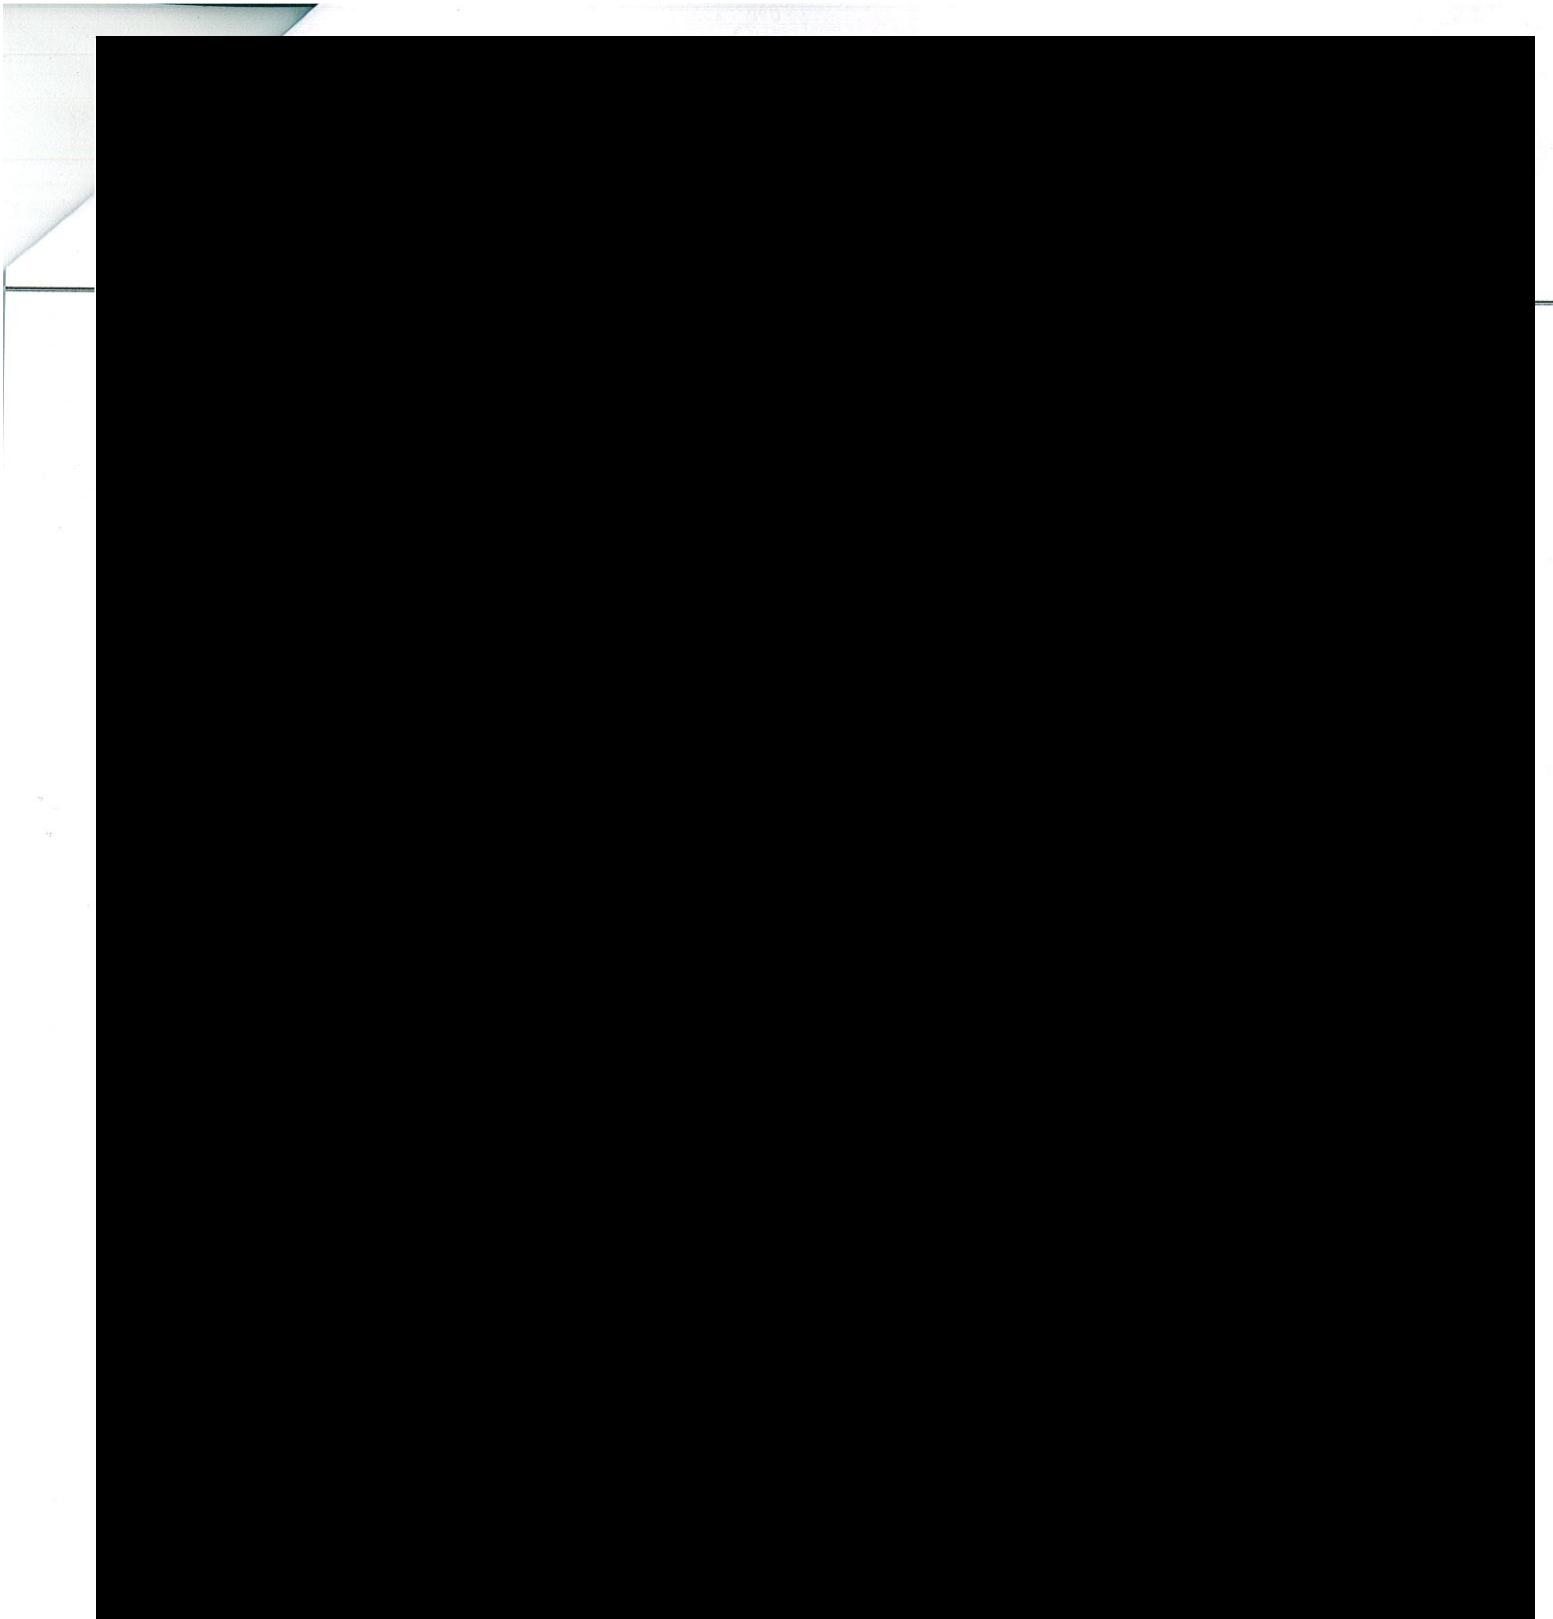

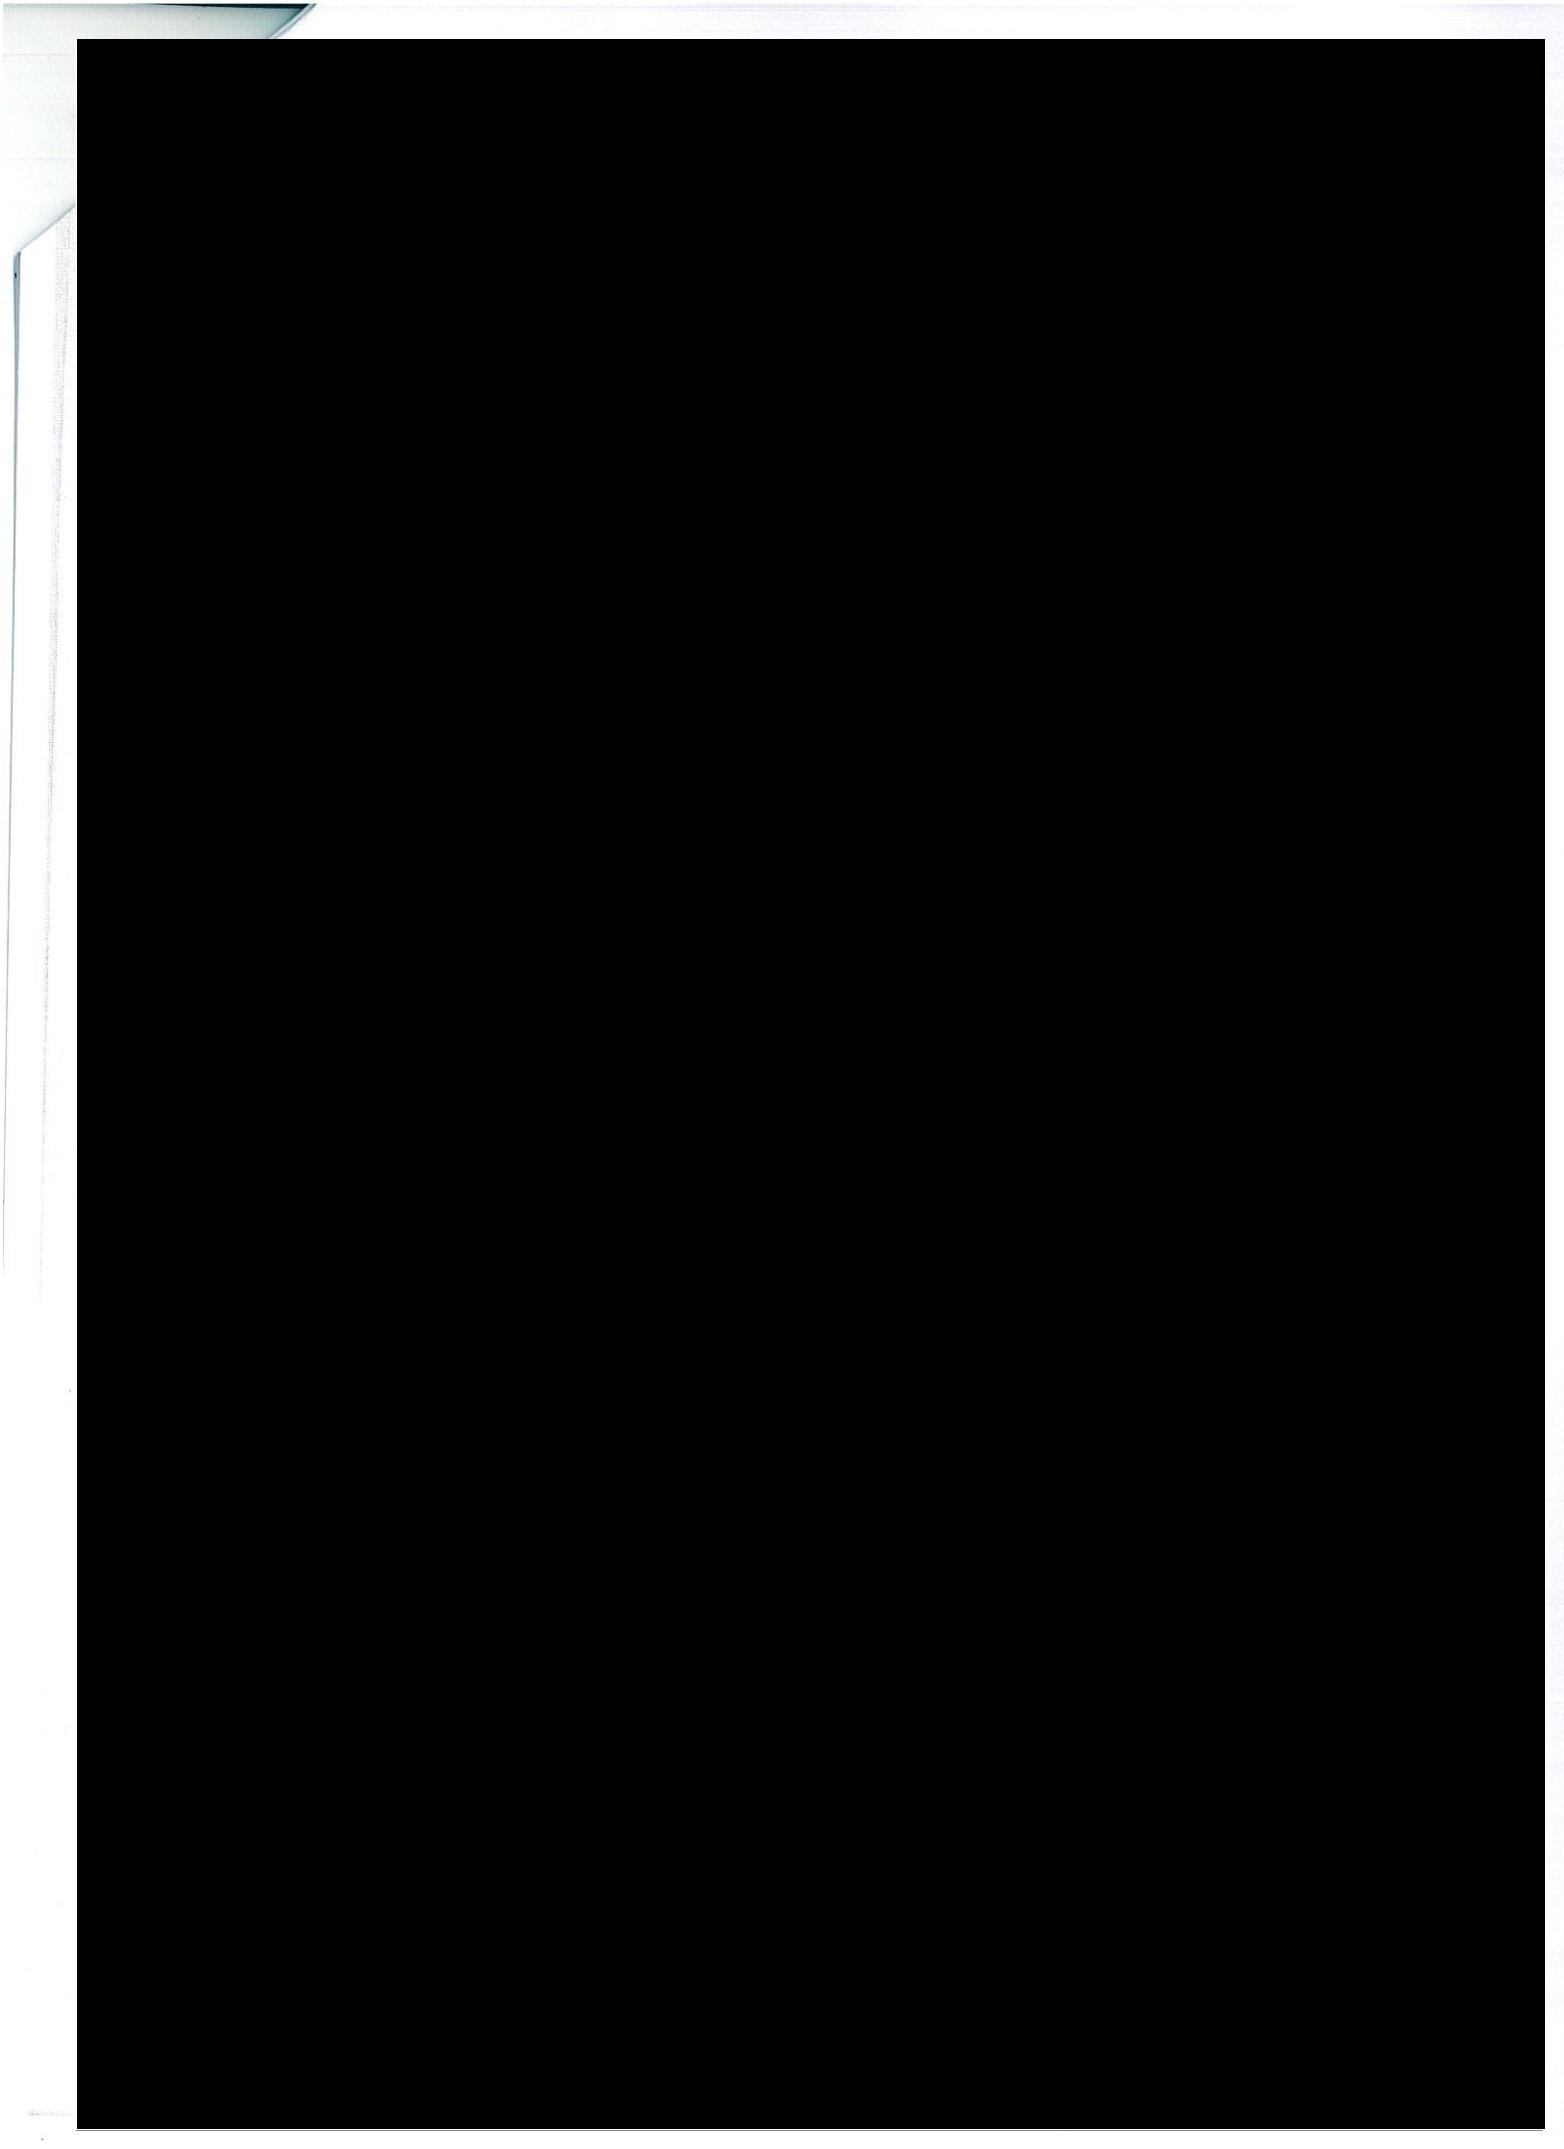

plethora number of massively parallel co-processors, like GPUs, FPGAs, and TPUs, are exploited to harness a tremendous number of tasks.

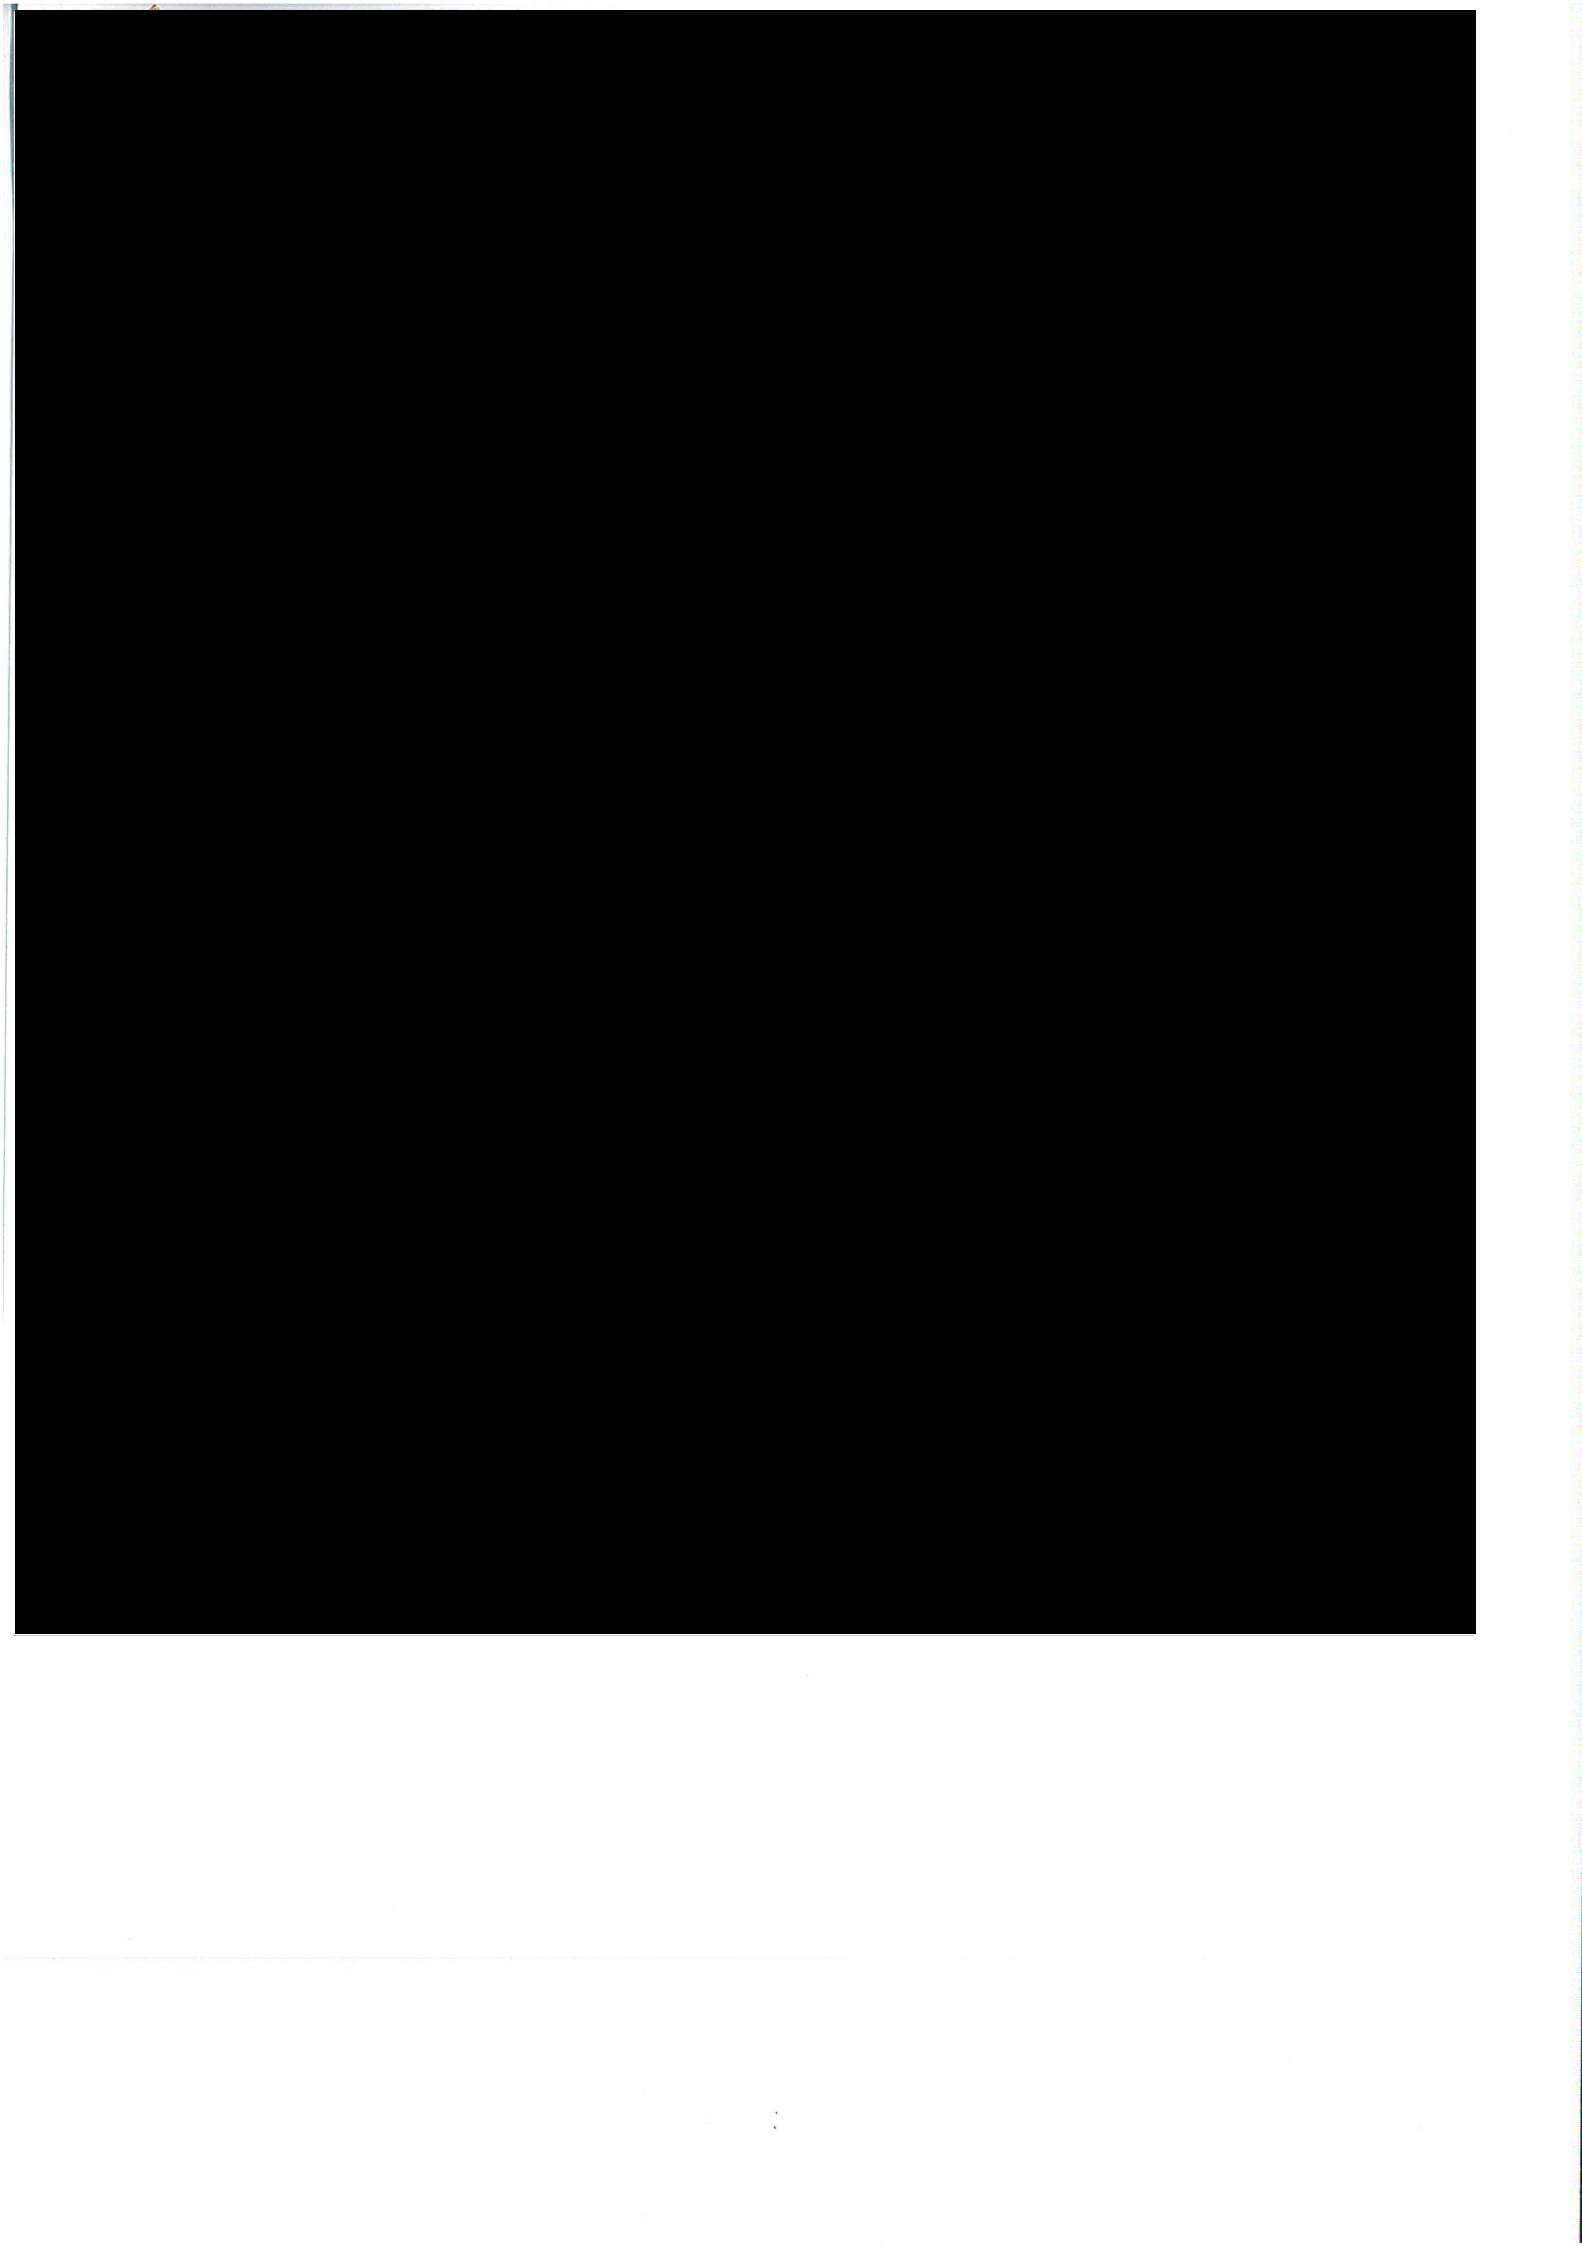

Conventional operating systems have offered a generic interface for many years. Still, efficient use of new hardware resources for data management systems and databases when facing workloads requires a new approach. Since there exists a variety of data structures in the Linux kernel, maintaining scalability in multicore systems is a cumbersome task. Furthermore, while running application domains, the kernel does not consider the bandwidth, locality of data, and also communication between different hardware components.

A thick black horizontal bar located at the bottom of the page, spanning most of the width of the content area.

Due to his interest in research and teamwork, he is head of a group of master students in our laboratory and manages them while doing their thesis works. His dedication to his duties is remarkable, and I am sure he is an excellent team leader.

I believe that his innovation, diligence, and skills will help him to be successful in his future career. So, I think he will be committed to your graduate program and be valuable to your department. In the end, I strongly recommend him to be admitted as a Ph.D. student at your university.

Yours Sincerely
